When comparing the differences between how a web page loads in different browsers, I right away noticed the difference in styling. The submit button defaults to a different color, the radio buttons automatically shift to a different side, and the text styled as "bold" looks different in each browser. I also notice a slight color difference in the color palette I chose. The mint color of the form is slightly more vibrant in safari than in chrome. Overall I am noticing the importance of texting in many browsers for the best end result.
